“ Please forgive me for coming to you with tears on my face...My name is Paul Durham, and the instant I saw Russell's photo, I realized I was seeing the face of a man I once called my adopted brother, over forty years ago. I have been casually looking for Russell on the web for a number of years, but never managed to locate him until this moment, and I am devastated that I never got to speak with him all these years.

In the mid to late seventies, Russell and I attended school together in Portland, Texas. Near the end of that decade, for personal reasons, Russ came to live for a while with my family (my mother, Julie, myself, and my little sister, Sherri) and because Russell was such a unique and gifted person, he immediately became a second son to Mom, and another brother to Sherri. Indeed, he was already my brother long before then.

I am overwhelmed at this heart-rending discovery that began as "just another hopeful attempt" to locate my friend...I am deeply saddened for his family and all of the other people who were as blessed as I was to have known Russell, and I solemnly pray that they find comfort in time, in the knowledge that Russ was truly a man dedicated to the work of the Creator.

I welcome anyone who wishes to contact me to reminisce about my friend, but please be aware that I'm finding my emotions seem to have a mind of their own right now.

Russell, I love you, Brother...
